

The HEALTH Trust

Snapshot of Service to Silicon Valley

2008

The Health Trust launches its new vision – Silicon Valley as the healthiest region in America – and announces a $30 million investment in three strategic initiatives: Healthy Living, Healthy Aging, Healthy Communities.

2007

An extraordinary exhibit of human anatomy and physiology, BODY WORLDS 2 & The Three Pound Gem, opens at The Tech Museum of Innovation with The Health Trust as the presenting sponsor. The Health Trust supplements the exhibit with health education and interactive health promotion activities for 275,000+ exhibit visitors.

2006

The Health Trust celebrates its 10th anniversary by starting a comprehensive strategic planning process to identify new ways to positively impact the community. In its first decade, The Health Trust provides more than $100 million of community benefit through program services and grantmaking activity.

Let's make Silicon Valley the healthiest region in America

2005

The Health Trust is the largest private provider in Santa Clara County of services to people living with HIV/AIDS, including home health, housing, transportation, nutrition, financial assistance and case management. In 2005, The Health Trust AIDS Services adds the Neil A. Christie Living Center, a drop-in center to provide social opportunities and emotional support.

2004

The obesity epidemic in America grabs the attention of The Health Trust and several other major local foundations who decide to join forces to address this major health problem. The Healthy Silicon Valley collaborative is formed to develop a comprehensive strategy with a focus on prevention and environmental changes that foster healthy lifestyles.

2003

High risk, underserved individuals often don't have access to preventive health care, so The Health Trust creates an annual Open Air Health Fair to bring health education and screenings into the community. As a result, almost 1,000 local residents learn they have high cholesterol, high blood pressure, high glucose, and/or are overweight or obese and are provided assistance in accessing medical services.

Since 1996

*Healthy Living
Healthy Aging
Healthy Communities*

2002

The Health Trust launches its Children Dental Initiative to provide free and low cost dental care to the 120,000 children in Santa Clara County who need to see a dentist. An innovative Children's Dental Center opening in 2008 will greatly expand the capacity to serve local children.

2001

With the ultimate goal of insurance coverage for every child in Santa Clara County, The Health Trust sends teams of multilingual enrollment specialists into the community to help low income families obtain government-sponsored insurance for their children.

2000

Throughout its history, The Health Trust looks for opportunities to help create strategic alliances that tackle significant health issues, such as the growing prevalence of diabetes. The Health Trust convenes a coalition of local agencies focused on diabetes to identify gaps in service, foster communication, and streamline services.

1999

The net assets of The Health Trust pass the $100 million mark. By 2008, foundation assets total $150 million.

1998

Each year, The Health Trust makes grants to innovative and effective programs that improve access to health, prevention and wellness services. In 1998, this means 58 grants funding a wide variety of programs including teen pregnancy prevention, senior caregiver support, and health care access for American Indians.

1997

Right from the start, The Health Trust is more than a traditional foundation that gives grants. It also provides direct services to the community including Meals On Wheels which delivers nutritious, hot meals to homebound seniors and disabled adults. For many, the daily delivery from Meals On Wheels is the only contact they have with the outside world.

1996

A community benefit foundation is created with the proceeds of the sale of four local nonprofit hospitals. Named The Health Trust, it begins with $52 million in assets and a commitment to improve the health and wellness of residents in Santa Clara County.
